

Energy independence united kingdom

Overview

The UK government has unveiled plans for a new Energy Independence Bill as part of the 2026 King's Speech, signalling a major push toward renewable energy, energy security and long-term economic resilience. We have taken a number of steps towards achieving our mission. Since July 2024, we have ended an effective ban on onshore wind. After King Charles' speech on 13 May 2026, the UK Parliament has detailed plans for a far-reaching overhaul of the energy system, aiming to accelerate the shift away from fossil fuels and expand capacity across nuclear and renewable generation. The King's Speech on 13 May 2026 placed energy security at the centre of the UK Government's. "A new Energy Independence Act will establish the framework for Labour's energy and climate policies" An Energy Independence Bill was referenced in the 2026 King's Speech and appears to have been referenced in the 2024 King's Speech too, but it has not yet been introduced to Parliament.
